Tasting

The Whisky and Fortified Wine tasting is a combination of two trainings, that is the tastings of whisky and wine, which we very often conduct. The aim of the training is to present how many aroma and taste aspects of whisky depend on wine and how much both liquors are connected. During the tasting the participants will learn why so many tastes and aromas of wine are present in whisky and why the single malt producers endeavour after oak barrels primarily used to store sherry or porto.

The producers of “The Scotch” age their product not only in the barrels after bourbon or sherry. Nowadays, the “finish” is also done in barrels after such wines as porto, madera or even the French bordeaux. During the tasting we will try exactly those, aged in different types of barrels, very rare and unusually interesting liquors.

This meeting is recommended to mixed groups, as wine will certainly suit women, whereas men will be more interested in stronger spirits. Naturally, this stereotype is not the rule and often women reach for “usigi” and men for the beverage of Dionysus. Many times we had the opportunity to conduct the tasting of wine and then a training on “exclusive bar liquors” or the tasting of “noble Polish spirits” and our national wines. However, this training is really unique and disputes all myths and habits.

Our Clients often had to choose one from all tastings offered by Pick and Taste. Repeatedly they combined trainings on whisky with the tasting of cigars. A surprising combination of whisky and fortified wine is a perfect form of entertainment in the evening, as well as a pleasant way to obtain a lot of precious information from the world of wine and whisky.

We have the pleasure to offer a tasting, which is excellent for male, female, and, especially, mixed groups. The combination of so different, but at the same time connected spirits in a really “magic” way can integrate a group, “break ice” and introduce into nice and pleasant mood, so much needed during events, as well as integration and thematic meetings.
